MARKET MATTERS.—We are not about to inflict upon our readers Ordinances, Petitions, or grievances, but design simply speaking of the numerou good things for "home consumption" to be found upon the market ground. Yesterday, for the first time during the season, there was a good display of hogs upon the market, there being perhaps our undred and fifty head which were for sale from ragons. The time has come when farmers are killing their pigs and hogs, and we may now expect see the market well supplied. In speaking of pork, it would be a good thing if some of the far-mers about would do more in the way of fattening young shoats after the manner of the farmers abou New York. In that market may be found pigs and shoats from five to seven months of age, most delcately and luxuriously fattened on the milk of Orange county and vicinity. These sprats are in great demand at the hotels and first class boarding ouses, and are as much superior to common pork as is tender beef steak to the horse fiesh which the Utah army was obliged to eat. The most devout Jew would turn away with a sigh from the contemplation of the "unclean meats."

Turkeys, chickens, geese, and ducks are being offered plentifully, and will be abundant until after Christmas. Chickens can be had for 9 cents per pound, turkeys for 10 cents, goese for 31 cents apiece, ducks for 50 cents per pair. It will be a eign of terror for six weeks among the feathered sipeds, and many a fearful quack and cackle will e given as the preinde to decapitation.

Even the name was unfamiliar, or pretended to be; and yet the person he asked was one whom he remembered as plotting realously to be invited to his dinner parties.

"They will remember me when they find that I am rich again," said Valentin to himself, bitterly.

He turned into a by street, and saw a beggar sating in the sunshine. It was the most cordial and happy face that had met his gaze since he came back. The man did not ask for anything either, or show him the withered arm that hung.

THE ROPE-WALK. In that building, long and low, With its windows all a-row, Like the port-holes of a buils, Human spiders spin and spin, Backward draw their threads so thin, Dropping each a bempen bulk. At the end, an open door; Squares of sunshine on the floor Light the long and dusky fane; And the whirring of a wheel, Duli and drowsy, makes me feel All its spokes are in my brain

As the spinners to the end Downward go and re-ascend, Gleam the long threads in the sun; While within this brain of mine Cobwebs brighter and more fine By the busy wheel are spun.

Two fair maidens in a swing, Like white doves upon the wing, First before my vision pass: Laughing, as their gentle hands Closely clasp the twisted strands, At their shadow on the grass.

Then a booth of mountebanks With its smell of tan and planks And a girl poised high in sir On a cord; in spangled dress, With a faded loveliness, And a weary look of care.

And a woman with bare arms

Drawing water from a well;
As the bucket mounts apace,
With it mounts her own fair face,
As at some magician's spell. Then an old man in a tower,
Ringing load the mountide hour,
While the rope coils round and round
Like a serpent at his feet,

And again in swift retreat, Nearly lifts him from the ground. Then within a prison yard, Faces fixed, and stern, and hard, Laughter and indecent mirth; Ah! it is the gallows free! Breath of Christian charity

Blow, and sweep it from the earth ! Then a school boy, with his kite, Gleaming in a sky of light,
And an eager, upward look;
Steeds pursued through lane and field;
Fowlers with their snares concealed;

And an angler by a brook. Ships rejoicing in the breeze, Wrecks that float o'er unknown seas, Anchors dragged through laithless sand; Sea-fog drifting overhead, And, with lessening line and lead, Sailors feeling for the land.

All these scenes do I behold, These, and many left untold, In that building long and low; While the whrel goes round and round, With a drowsy, dreamy sound, And the spinners backward go.

THE FIRST AND THIRD MARRIAGE.

A Canadian Romance. [Concluded.]

It is time to go back to M. Valentin, and see what become of the fond husband, the coura-grous adventurer. At first he was almost disgrous adventurer. At first he was almost dis-tracted at the thought of parting from Hortense, but once the Rubicon passed he became more calm. A few years, he thought, would find them together never to part; and perhaps they would be all the happier for the separation. Full of hope he went to the gold mines of Australia. Day by day he wrought there, enduring hardships never heard of before, but bearing them with the courage and fortitude of the fits not unlike those produced by strychnise, a hero. Ever before him was the image of Hortense. It nerved his arm in the rough and a young man who had boarded in the house mines when he struck his iron into the gold was by some suspected of having administered it. yielding soil; it soothed him when he lay, Certain it was that Mrs. Stacey had taken some burning with fever, in a rude shanty in the salts and oatnip tea half an hour before she died. "Somewhere out of town. I don't go so far now, I am so old. I think it is Bloomsbury Place, West Terrace." To paint M Valentin's feelings would be a nopeless task. Hortense married, but still free! A painful revulsion took place in his mind, and he resolved as all seemed to forget him, that he would not yet discover himself. That night he would not yet discover himself. That night he visited the neighborhood of Hortense, read "Stanbury" on the door and managed to secure the next house, which happened to be quite empty, and having its garden adjoining hers—The next day he furnished it richly, brought a number of servants, bought a fine carriage and horses, and under the name of Ritchie he set-tled down to watch at his leisure the movements of his neighbor. He chose all of his private rooms on that side af the house which verlooked hers.

The first time that he saw her was in the garden. She looked still handsome, but very and and pensive. He wondered if it was for his loss, or her late husbands! He soon became satisfied that she lived a very retired and quiet life; that she had little company, and kept early hours. It was early spring, but he had plenty of flowers and fruits in the greenhouse, and he sent some for her acceptance with Mr. Ritchie's sent some for her acceptance with Mr. Ritchie's compliments. Again and again he repeated the gifts, and each time with a selection that marked a delicate taste. Hortense was charmed with her new neighbor whom she had not seen. The flowers had been sent several times, whom he added to them alrequest that he might call on the lady. She returned a favorable answer, and under cover of the twilight hour, he found himself in the room with Hortense. The sound of his voice filled her with indescribable emotion, because it resembled that of her first husband; but she persuaded herself that it must be found. but she persuaded herself that it must be fancy She found her neighbor agreeable and attentive She found her neighbor agreease and attended. He did not neglect any opportunity of being with her. They rode together, sung together, and often his voice would thrill through the soul of Hortense, like a remembered lay from ome far-off land.

Insensibly she was becoming interested in him. He had told her much that was true of whom he said was lost to him—he did not say by death—but Hortense saw it in that light.— More and more tender grew their intercourse, for the lady secemed utterly to disregard his scars, until she was scarcely surprised, and certainly not offended, at receiving an offer of his head.

She was alone in the world; she had no one to consuit; no one had any right to blame her for trusting to one of whom she knew so little. It was her own risk, and she accepted him; frankly telling him how well she had loved him who had gone from her sight, and promising the she would try to love him with the same constancy.

M Valentin exulted greatly in this answer M Valentin exulted greatly in this answer, and come near discovering himself; but he had desired to delay it to a certain time, and he checked himself. The wedding day was fixed, and everything was in readiness for the occasion. In exchanging rings, Hortense looked fixedly at the one which the bridegroom gave her. It was the very ring which M. Valentin had given her at their first wedding! She fainted on the spot, and he began to think that he had carried natters too far. He hung overher with an anxiety such as he never knew before. If she died now by his own folly, what would become of him! He excerated his scheme, and repented even with tears that he had been led to pursue it. But Hortense awoke to life, awoke to the new joy of his presence, to ask his forgiveness for the past, and inspire new hopes for the future. There had ever been an inexplicable attraction towards him on her part, from their first interview; and as she confessed this, her husband was mits inclined table attraction to a second to be a straight and to be attraction to a second to be a straight and to be a straigh interview; and as she confessed this, her hus band was quite inclined to be satisfied, and to forget the apparent disrespect which he fancied she had paid his memory.

As M. Valentin predicted, the inhabitants of Montreal, as soon as they found out his wealth, were happy to make his acquaintance, and remembered him as an old friend. With the true spirit of an honest man, he has liquidated his debts to the last farthing; and now, with his still beautiful wife, he is travelling through Europe, happy as any couple can possibly be on their bridal tour.
